Judges Comments:

There was a general lack of varietal expression and flavour concentration and some sulphide issues, however on the whole wines were of sound commercial quality, bright and fresh. The best wine showed excellent fruit expression with complex layers, creating a satisfying wine with great length.

Judges Comments:

A small class of pinot gris still showing some fruit and layers of complexity starting to develop. The size of the class demonstrates that most pinot gris wines are currently made with a ‘drink-now’ mindset.

Judges Comments:

In general, a good class with a diversity of style and the best wines displaying freshness, fruit weight and concentration. The use of oak was a significant differentiating factor in determining the higher medals, with these examples having well selected and integrated oak. The freshness and fruit purity in some wines was compromised by heavy handed use of oak.

Judges Comments:

Quite a consistent quality class of well-made wines where it seems winemakers exercised responsiveness to the challenging wet vintage conditions (in some regions), The best wines showed superior fruit presence and complexity, with balanced winemaking artefact.

A solid class of well-made red wines, demonstrating the industry's growing competence with this variety. A few wines lacked fruit concentration, and some required more subtle oak treatment. The best wines show great balance, varietal expression and complexity.

A fascinating class to judge and great to see the effort and advancements producers are making in this area. Thing to watch are use of oak, which in some cases overwhelms the fruit character, and tannin balance. The best Wines had great complexity of character and fruit presences.

Some really lovely diversity of styles from both warmer and cooler sites with the best wines having balanced oak, acid in check, silky tannin and purity and freshness of fruit. A good class overall.

Judges Comments:

It was so interesting and educational to judge these emerging classes. Thankfully we had good experience on the panel with making these wines. Some displayed neutrality and some concentrated characters that dominated the wine creating imbalance. The wines that received awards showed clear characteristics of that wine style/variety, acid balance and tannin structure. We look forward to seeing this category develop further.
